Coordinator's Message

Tadashi Ishida

My oldest student is 90 years old. She comes to my class from a nursing home by taxi. She has a firm grasp of English grammar and she has also acquired a good pronunciation of English. One day after class, I asked her how she learned English. This is what she answered. She had studied English hard with the help of a record imported from England to teach English to her two sons before they went to junior high school.

Teaching is learning. The acquisition of English is a lifelong process. To better teach English to my students, I would like to improve my own English proficiency with the help of the other members of the LLL SIG.
